Of the bass most liable to rise to your files the stream bass have certainly been considered the foremost. The reason for this should be quite plain. Stream bass, like stream trout, feed greatly on water bred files, which we may believe they are constantly on a lookout for, as witness how nicely the small mouth rises to take an insect on the water surface.

Stream bass, one might say, are right in the fly element, whereas the lake bass

Anchor most commonly used consists of a long shank with a big ring for attaching the anchor rope on one end, while the other end has first five equally distant hooks or prongs to bite into the rocks and hold the boat, and beyond these is a little ring, and you may never have known its nurnose.

The your anchor rope in the small ring, then bring it up along the long shank—not through the big ring—but, tied to the outside of the big ring with a pleca of cord strong enough so that if the anchor enage and you pull hard enough it will break and thus permit the anchor to come up backward. the anchor to come up backward.

Corson's Inlet! What significant recollections of happy days those two words recall to the lovers of salt water angling who have had the pleasure of visiting this famous fishing resort.

Corson's Inlet, so named on the railroad time tables, or Strathmere-by-the-Sea, as it is officially known by its post office name, consists of a unique colony of about twenty residences and three hotels, viz., West Jersey Cottages, con-ducted by Gus Wittkamp; Strathmere

During the summer season daily excursions from Philadelphia are run by both roads, the trains leaving in the morning and returning in the evening.

I have had the pleasure on my visits there of stopping at the West Jersey Cottages, conducted by that prince of good fellows and genial host, Gus Wittkamp, and one word at the beginning will suffice to sum up the entire situation, and that is that before you are there ten minutes you feel perfectly "at home," and everybody knows what that means. No ceremony; everything natural. If you wish to go in to lunch or dinner with your fishing togs or rubber hip boots on you are just as welcome as if you were in an evening dress. And Mrs. Wittkamp and the family all contribute their share toward creating that feeling that we call "comfy."

The largest tuna taken on light tackle weighed 77% pounds and was caught up so by R. Rochester, Jr. L. G. Murphy last as does year took a tuna of 66 pounds on light tackle.

Other anglers who have taken tuna or loss of a light tackle weighing over 50 pounds sollow: Arthur J. Eddy, Chicago, and A. W. Hooper, Boston, 60 pounds each; without a Ben Williams, Los Angeles, 5514 pounds; He will stand at the business without a a thirty foot lane and endure without a whimper the loss of a cast if he deviates p. T. Newport, Arcadia, Cal., 54 pounds and E. J. Polkinhorn, Pasadena, Cal. Experts of the Tuna Club looked to is a mighty sight easier to hold the lead see Zane Grey add to the light tackle than it is to hit that measly lane at 300 achievements last season, but unfortunately he was called away before he had a chance to put up a record. A LESSON FOR GERMANY.

off two or three more leads!

Why not disqualify him immediately upon casting off and conserve all these loses? he won't be any worse off as far as winning a prize goes unless the majority of his class get into the same boat. It would tend to induce greater to his work.

"It seems strange," said a sportsman who made the discovery, "that a weaker animal should prove a match for a Canadian wildcat, but evidently the range finding device of nature worked at 100 per cent. efficiency and by adopting strategic moves cut off the enemy's food supplies."
